On the Cuban Crisis

By Bernard Gwertzman

MOSCOW—Four days before President John F. Kennedy informed the world about the Cuban missile crisis, Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev proposed a Soviet-American summit meeting which the American leader first seemed to support but later in the day rejected, according to Soviet archives material just made public.

mentions his father's session at the White House in which not only did the Soviet side take the initiative in discussing Cuba but also proposed a summit meeting.

The Foreign Ministry documentation dealing with the 1962 crisis over Soviet missiles in Cuba was included in an article by Anatoly A. Gromyko, the son of the Soviet foreign minister, which was published in the monthly historical journal, Voprosy Istori.

Mr. Kennedy was given by Mr. Gromyko a proposal from Mr. Khrushchev—the is not mentioned by name in the article—suggesting a summit meeting to settle the disputed international problems and the examination of questions which cause divergences between the Soviet Union and the United States."

The first of two articles, entitled "The Caribbean Crisis," covers events up to Mr. Kennedy's speech of Oct. 22, 1962, in which he reported on the discovery of Soviet offensive missiles on Cuba and demanded the withdrawal by Soviet authorities.

No Formal Agenda
"The President reacted positively to this proposal," the Soviet Union. He only noted that he would like at such a meeting to discuss problems without formal agenda and without giving priority to any special questions under discussion."

As an example of the tension of the days, Mr. Gromyko reports on the private meeting between then Secretary of State Dean Rusk and Soviet Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin shortly before Mr. Kennedy's speech.

The author added that it was difficult to determine from this account whether Mr. Kennedy in fact wanted a summit, was persuaded by his advisers, or whether his positive response was only "diplomatic camouflage" to disguise "the planned aggressive course against the Soviet Union and Cuba."

In his article, Mr. Gromyko, who consistently defends the Soviet position, also rebuked those Americans who later accused his father, Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko, of bad faith when he failed to disclose the presence of the missiles when he met with the President at the White House Oct. 18.

In any event, that evening at a dinner given by Mr. Rusk to Mr. Gromyko, Llewellyn Thompson, then a special adviser on Soviet affairs to the President, told Soviet Ambassador Dobrynin that "the White House would like to postpone the summit meeting."

Mr. Gromyko's article said that because of the tense situation in the Cuban area following the abortive Bay of Pigs invasion in April 1961, and plans being hatched by groups in the United States, "the Soviet Union and Cuba, in full conformity with the norms of international law, in the summer of 1962 reached an accord on the strengthening of the defense capacities of Cuba."

"In the opinion of the American side, a meeting in November 1962 would have an unprepared character and it is doubtful if this would lead to positive results. The President, said Thompson, thinks that such meetings have extraordinary important significance and has a failure is intolerable."

"Sobering Influence"
Medium range missiles were deployed on the island for defensive purposes. This was an action, aimed at exerting a sobering influence on the advocates of military adventure in Washington and the preventing of a new American invasion against the Cuban people," he wrote.

"This episode, with particular sharpness, shows the lack of any desire by the American leadership and of Kennedy personally to analyze the situation and solve the problem by peaceful, diplomatic means. Kennedy obviously preferred crisis diplomacy," the author said.

Mr. Gromyko does not mention that American intelligence also discovered plans to build intermediate range missiles when a U-2 plane's film was studied Oct. 14.

American sources have generally stated that the administration at that time believed the Russians were hoping to finish deployment of missiles and then surprise the United States with some ultimatum on Berlin or some other dangerous point, and that it was important not to let Moscow know that Washington knew about the deployment activity.

Mr. Gromyko, a section chief of the Institute of the U.S.A., a branch of the Academy of Sciences, is a frequent commentator on international problems, and the author of a book, "1,036 Days of President Kennedy."

Mr. Gromyko spends a great deal of attention on the fact that during his meeting with his father, President Kennedy did not raise the Cuban issue, but that his father did.

A key element in all accounts of the crisis was a meeting held at the White House between Foreign Minister Gromyko and Mr. Kennedy that lasted more than two hours Oct. 18, while plans were being laid in the administration on how to respond to the presence of the Soviet missiles.

Also, he said that the President did not speak specifically about the question of Soviet missiles in Cuba, "limiting himself only to general statements, that because of the actions of the Soviet government in the Caribbean, the situation had 'suddenly' worsened."

The Soviet foreign minister responded to the appeal of Cuba for help only because this appeal had the purpose of eliminating the threat hanging over Cuba," the author said, quoting official reports.

"The President was told that if the Soviet Union helps the Cubans with training in arms, destined for defense, then this situation in no way can be regarded as a threat to the United States," Kennedy answered by repeating that the United States has no plans to invade Cuba and is striving to avoid actions which could lead to war, if only such actions will not be provoked by the other side," he said.

"This, he said, was because the Kennedy administration 'consciously rejected different diplomatic means, by the help of which it would have been possible to avert the confrontation.'"

"It is worth posing the question: Why must the diplomatic representative of the U.S.S.R. in advance inform the United States government about this or any other defensive measures taken for the defense of friendly states since at that time the United States never gave the Soviet Union information about the deployment of arms 'so-called countries,' he said.

To underscore this point, he

Nixon's '72 Handicap: An Analysis

By Richard F. Janssen

WASHINGTON, July 29 (AP-DJ)—The economic outlook appears to be the major problem for President Nixon in considering his 1972 reelection strategy, fact which is distressing many Republican planners.

Worried Republicans acknowledge that the administration is behind its schedule on getting the economy moving again. The leading indicators, which forecast future economic trends, declined in June after seven consecutive monthly gains.

Meanwhile, further inflation is threatened by this summer's large wage settlements in industry. First-year increases just agreed on range as high as 15 percent. Price increases by business and the rising U.S. money supply are working in the same direction.

Further inflation is threatened by this summer's large wage settlements in industry. First-year increases just agreed on range as high as 15 percent. Price increases by business and the rising U.S. money supply are working in the same direction.

Strategists theorize that the surprisingly high rate of savings—8.4 percent of consumers' after-tax income, up from 7.9 percent in 1970—could mean a deep retrenchment. On the other hand, it could be paving the way for inflationary spending.

The administration is also holding back any additional stimulus to the economy because officials reason that people may loosen their spending as soon as anxieties about the Vietnam war have been put aside. A political settlement of the war would have "a destabilizing effect on the U.S. economy, one administration aide asserts.

Prices Fall Through Dow 'Support Level'

By Vartan G. Vartan

NEW YORK, July 29 (NYT)—Stock prices, dropping steadily for the last three sessions, plunged through support levels today to reach a new low since late January.

The Dow Jones industrial average plummeted 10.58 to 851.43. This brought the cumulative three-day loss—with a rally attempt notably absent—to 37.45.

Wall Street analysts blamed the current weakness, which surfaced this week with alarming speed, to an array of drab economic news—ranging from the June decline in leading economic indicators to the widening impact of the rail strike—as well as a fresh psychological shock.

Rumors of a rift between President Nixon and Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, sent shock waves today through the financial community, where Mr. Burns is highly respected.

"We had a liquidity crisis last summer," lamented one broker. "Right now we've got a crisis of confidence in the White House."

Today's sell-off brought the Dow back to its lowest close since Jan. 27 at 850.83 and exacted a terrible toll on market statistics.

Rapid Growth in Money Supply A further element, at least psychologically, encouraging price increases is the upsurge in the U.S. money supply, some analysts say.

During the past half-year the money supply has grown at an annual rate of 11 percent—termed by the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank "the most rapid for any six-month period since World War II."

Other analysts, including Homer Jones, former chief economist of the St. Louis bank, feel that the major inflationary impact is more than a year away—which means election time.

New Fed chairman Arthur F. Burns, expressing concern about inflation, is making it clear that the Fed will cut the growth of the money supply. Such a slowdown, Mr. Jones calculates, would affect production with a lag of "about two or three quarters," which could affect employment in 1972.

Auto Prices Rise at Ford And Chrysler

By Robert W. Irvin

DETROIT, July 29 (WP)—Two of the Big Three auto makers—Ford and Chrysler—are sending dealers tentative prices showing increases of $100 to $300 more for 1972 models.

General Motors said it is not sending out tentative '72 prices, but increases are a foregone conclusion.

Ford said today its dealers are being given advanced billing prices on 1972 models which average 5.2 percent higher than current models. The company would not give a dollar figure but said the average 1971 Ford car had a retail price of $3,950. This would indicate a $205 price hike on a '72 Ford.

A Chrysler spokesman said his company's increases are "in the same ballpark" as the 5.2 percent Ford hike.

Options Prices Up Overall, Ford said option prices are going up 5 percent for the automatic transmission, air conditioning, power steering, power brakes, radio and optional engines on all cars.

The company blamed the increases on higher costs. It said final prices will be announced shortly before introduction time in September.

Chrysler refused to discuss the tentative car prices being sent dealers. Leonard Woodcock, president of the United Auto Workers union, told newsmen that Ford's increase "is totally unwarranted."

He accused the companies of "blindly following" what he termed a rigid price-profit formula and pointed to a first-half profit of $1.7 billion for General Motors and $387 million for Ford.

British Ford Midge LONDON, July 29 (AP-DJ)—Ford Motor Co. Ltd. said today it signed the Confederation of British Industry's undertaking to keep price increases within 5 percent for twelve months. Ford said it will be asking its 1,200 suppliers to cooperate in the venture.

Reed International LONDON, July 29 (AP-DJ)—Reed International posted a 35.7 percent profit-gain for its first fiscal quarter ended June 30 with earnings rising to $3.8 million ($8.1 million) from $2.8 million in the year-ago period, the paper products and packaging firm said today.

Senate Gets Bill Restricting Level of Steel Imports

WASHINGTON, July 29 (AP-DJ)—Legislation to restrict steel imports was introduced in the Senate today with the support of 34 senators.

Republican leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, chief sponsor with Democratic Sen. Vance Hartke, of Indiana, said the bill was prompted by a crisis situation.

The bill, aimed primarily at European and Japanese producers, would limit imports for this year to 15.1 million tons and hold the annual increase to no more than 2.5 percent.

"The only way left to assure the revival of the domestic steel industry is to recognize the changing world market conditions as they are and adjust to meet them."

Sen. Hartke described the bill as a final measure "to save jobs." He said every 1 million tons of domestic steel products lost to imports represents a potential employment of 7,500 U.S. workers.

On this basis, he said, more than 60,000 job opportunities have been lost this year.

HISTORY AND CLASS CONSCIOUSNESS

Studies in Marxist Dialectics
By Georg Lukacs. Translated by Rodney Livingstone. 356
MIT Press. $3.95.
(Part one of a two-part book review.)
Reviewed by Alvin W. Gouldner

GEORG LUKACS'S "History and Class Consciousness" is a truly extraordinary work, and its English translation, after almost 50 years of neglect by English and American publishers, is a major event. That it took so long to make this exceptional book available to English readers is due partly to the character of the publishing industry, but rather more to Lukacs's own character as a Marxist intellectual: upon its original publication in 1923, it was assailed by Social Democrats and Bolsheviks alike and was officially condemned by Zinoviev at the 1924 Congress of the Third International.

That it appears now, along with a growing convoy of commentaries, is a symptom of emerging developments in Anglo-American culture as well as of the continuing crisis of Marxist "orthodoxy." Most Americans who know of Georg Lukacs think of him primarily as a literary critic or a sociologist of literature. But the concentration of his efforts to these fields signifies his political defeat and embodies, in some part, a strategy of survival.

In a recent book, "Georg Lukacs: The Man, His Work and His Ideas," edited by G. E. R. Parkinson (Random House and Vintage), Istvan Mészáros gives a brilliant discussion of Lukacs's dialectics and other contributions to Marxist intellectual and political thought. This portrays him as a rich young Hungarian Jew who assimilated the great traditions of German philosophical idealism and of classical academic sociology, as a student of Georg Simmel and associate of Max Weber and Karl Mannheim. Lukacs was committed to public education in his ill-starred Hungarian-Soviet Republic of 1919 and subsequently fled to Vienna, there to edit Kommunist in 1920-22, with an ultra-left group that resisted all efforts to inhibit revolutionary militancy, whether these came from the newly prudent Bolsheviks or from the long-revisionist Social Democrats.

After his work was condemned by the Third International, Lukacs proceeded, as he says, to complete his "apprenticeship" in Marxism in the course of which he supported Stalin on the question of "socialism in one country"; indeed, after 1924 Lukacs was a Stalinist. In 1929, in order to survive politically, he issued a self-criticism of his political line on the Hungarian Revolution. In 1933 and, strangely enough, for the first time, he issued a public repudiation of "History and Class Consciousness."

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

The diagramed deal, from the life master pairs event of the American Contract Bridge League's summer nationals, gave Mike Lawrence, a member of the world champion Aces, a chance to demonstrate his brilliance in defense. He held the East cards and opened the bidding in third seat with one heart. South overcalled one spade, and continued to game when his partner raised to the three-level. The game was an optimistic one, and as the cards lay the question was whether South would go down one trick for an average score, or two down for a very bad one.

A heart was led, and East's nine forced the declarer's queen. South's only hope for 10 tricks was to find a lucky distribution that would permit him to avoid the loss of a trump trick. He led a low spade to dummy's jack, hoping to find West with a doubleton king, and Lawrence made the fine play of dropping the eight. This opened up another possibility for South: it seemed likely that East had begun with ten-eight doubleton, in which case the contract could be made.

Accordingly, South entered his hand with a club lead and played the spade queen, expecting to pin East's ten. It was a shock to him when West discarded, and East could not now be prevented from making two trump tricks. As South had to lose a heart trick and two diamonds, he was down two in the game. Notice that if East had made the normal play of winning the

PEOPLE: Advice on Nude Swimming

Chicago Union Stockyards, once the world's largest, employed 40,000 people at the height of its 106-year history.

Chicago's Stockyards To Close Today

By John N. Gregory

CHICAGO, July 29 (UPI)—The end of an era will come quietly tomorrow to a once boisterous industrial giant that stirred more excitement in its 106-year life than any other of its kind in the nation.

The Chicago Union Stockyards will leave the scene like one of the many millions of lambs that entered the famed South Side facility.

At their height, the yards were responsible for 40,000 jobs in the pens and in affiliated industries, occupying an area of slightly more than a square mile.

When the last animal walks in before the yards close down tomorrow, about 150 men will be on the payroll and only slightly more are working in the remaining nearby industries.

In a way, the success of the yards was responsible for their ultimate death. They attracted many other industries and droves of new residents. Property became exceptionally valuable in the area and in the end transportation became difficult in the congestion, labor costs increased and taxes soared while the efficiency of the operation remained virtually unchanged.

The people who went into the yards were immigrants—Irish, German, Lithuanian, Bohemian, Spaniard, Croatian, Pole, Slav, Arab and others.

The lone asset the immigrant brought when he applied for work was a strong back—and each night he took home with him the strong smell of his trade. When a south wind wafted over the yards and packinghouse and carried the pungent odor to more affluent neighborhoods, the curses that followed echoed off some of the city's finest furnishings.

It used to be great sport for kids from the yards neighborhoods to stand around outside a downtown nightclub or theater and watch the grimaces of mink-clad ladies as they stepped into the "fresh" air of the outdoors when the wind was "right."

As word of the abusive working conditions in the yards spread, Upton Sinclair, then a reporter for an East Coast socialist newspaper, was assigned to write a story about them.

Sinclair's book, "The Jungle," was published in 1906. It resulted in legislation from Congress calling for more sanitary slaughtering and packinghouse operations.

"I aimed at the public's heart and by accident hit it in the stomach," Mr. Sinclair said.

The sweat and sore backs and the pungent odor to more affluent neighborhoods, the curses that followed echoed off some of the city's finest furnishings.

"We felt kind of special," Marion Edgar, a weighmaster, recalled. "The yards became a way of life. Kids around went to school, graduated, then went to work in the yards. That was the whole works—their whole life. A lot of 'em never even left their neighborhoods in all their lives."

Mr. Edgar, 62, has worked for nearly 20 years in the stockyards.

"Sure I'll miss the place," he said. "It's something different—the outdoors, a lot of walking, lots of talking. The yards were kind of a link between the big city and the old rural community. As far as the rural folk go, Chicago and the stockyards were one in their minds."

"Of course, that's not really how it was the last few years. The place has been slipping. It started about 15 years ago and just kept coming until this..."

Maybe the yards are dead now. But their mark has been made.

You take a walk through Canaryville, the neighborhood that's called the "Front Yard" of the stockyards. It's all Irish, descendants of the immigrants who came to America around 1850. Hardly a family lives there that doesn't have a stockyards heritage.

The same goes for the more widely known back-of-the-yards neighborhood immediately west of the old facility. Most of the residents there are Poles, Lithuanians, Bohemians. Their fathers and grandfathers were "happened" in the stock and pork chop industry.

Trading volume at the USY once reached 2.2 million cattle a year and more than 7.5 million hogs. As the Chicago yards declined, the hogs were moved to smaller markets at places like Peoria, Omaha and Sioux City, closer to their supply sources. Cattle volume has decreased considerably, too, since the old days.

A new market about 50 miles southwest of Chicago will open to take on the burden of the world's largest open shambles. The new facility will begin modestly, with a projected handle daily of about 4,500 cattle and no hogs until next year.

State's Attorney Patrick Leahy, Burlington, Vermont, has issued an advisory to law enforcement officers confronted with public bathing in the nude, colloquially known as skinny-dipping.

"1. In public areas and semi-public areas, nude bathing is not acceptable. In such instances, the officer receiving the complaint should order the person to dress. Failure to do so should result in a summons to court."

"2. On private land out of view of the public, the State has no legitimate interest and swimmers should be left alone."

In a memo to his police departments in the state, Leahy said he investigated the matter thoroughly, "reviewing the old Norman Rockwell paintings... showing such activities allegedly taking place in Vermont."

Along this line, Leahy said, "I was unable to either confirm or refute the persistent rumor that Vermont's No. 1 politician, Calvin Coolidge, had also engaged in such activities within the borders of the State while still subject to Vermont laws. Leahy said that "each member of his office offered to investigate this matter in an undercover manner so to speak."

Singer Ella Fitzgerald left Paris for Boston yesterday after cutting short her singing tour because of an eye ailment. Before boarding a plane she said, "I feel better referring to a slight problem she developed suddenly while singing in Nice two weeks ago. 'I'll take a vacation until October, then I'll sing in Washington and Las Vegas,' Miss Fitzgerald said."

Naturalists from all over England will gather on a construction site in Leeds this weekend to dig through a half-ton of rubble to try to locate a plant which, legend has it, makes women irresistible. The plant is lovage, or leivestium officinale, and was discovered on waste land six years ago. Naturalists went to the hundreds to see it. Then, last weak, a truck dumped the rubble on top of it. "But we think the plant might still be alive," one naturalist said, "and we'll try to locate it. The plant is extremely rare in Britain."

Motoring Notes: In Oslo, the police chief was held by his own petard when he was caught by a radar speed trap. "I was in the middle of a long line of cars, all traveling at the same speed and I simply couldn't slow down," said Johan Gjerdet, Mayor. But his explanation to the Justice Minister might have made more of an impression if he had not previously been reported for speeding. In Rotterdam, two policemen stopped a motorist for a routine check and found that the man did not have a driving license. When they looked on in astonishment as the man swallowed his car keys. He got a ticket and was advised to go to a hospital. There were raised eyebrows and smirks in New York Wednesday when Georgina Rink of Lebanon, the newly crowned Miss Universe, told a press conference she believed in sex before marriage. "One must have a lot of experience," she said, "because marriage is not a simple thing."

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Finch Cox have moved into Essex House Hotel, a 1,100-room luxury hotel overlooking New York's Central Park. Andrew Malone, general manager of Essex House, said the former Tricia Nixon and her husband occupy a large suite facing on the park.
